To the New Haven Chamber of Commerce is due the credit of first agitating this matter in the east. All measures in their incipient state came from the New Haven Chamber of Commerce as early as 1875, 1876 and 1880, calling attention to the importance of protecting our towns from being put under tribute. At an annual meeting of the State Board of Trade held in Hartford, January 21, 1891, a resolution was presented by the New Haven Chamber of Commerce, recommending the erection of harbor and coast defenses, and particularly the fortification of the eastern entrance of Long Island Sound, as being the most direct approach to the port of New York and coast of Rhode Island and Connecticut.
